The Enemy Complete Summary in English

It is the time of the World War. An American prisoner of war is washed ashore in a dying state and is found at the doorstep of a Japanese doctor. Should he save him as a doctor or hand him over to the Army as a patriot? The summary of the chapter, The Enemy, will give a full insight into the chapter. The MCQ will help the students to understand the idea. The summary will tell you about the development of the idea or theme, character, and duties of a doctor. The writer's intention will be clear in the story development.

"Pearl Comfort Sydenstricker was born on June 26, 1892, in Hillsboro, West Virginia. Her parents, Absalom, and Caroline Sydenstricker were Southern Presbyterian missionaries, stationed in China. Pearl was the fourth of seven children (and one of only three who would survive to adulthood). She was born when her parents were near the end of a furlough in the United States; when she was three months old, she was taken back to China, where she spent most of the first forty years of her life. "

The author of "The Enemy," Pearl S. Buck, poses an open question: "What is a doctor's duty?" What is the duty of a citizen in a time of war? " Sadao's house was located on the Japanese coast. He lived there with his wife, Hana, and two children, as well as his servant. One day, they saw a man on the seashore who was seriously injured and lying motionless.

They approached him and examined him. He was a wounded American soldier in the war. Dr. Sadao was in a pickle. Should he treat the injured American soldier or turn him over to the police? They would be arrested if they kept the man in their home. He would die if they left him there. They took him to their house after much deliberation. The servants were terrified when they saw the person and asked the doctor not to treat the war prisoner. They protested by leaving the house.

Hana washed the white man's breasts and face with hot water as they began his treatment. Sadao carried out the surgery on the American soldier. He extracted his bullet from his body. He was still unconscious when he came to, and he was very weak. He was terrified by everything, and Hana reassured him that he would be fine soon.

Dr. Sadao informed the old general about the prisoner of war. The General's behaviour was quite surprising as he didn't act in time to arrest the American soldier. He didn't even arrest the doctor for giving shelter to a war criminal. He didn't even send his men to kill the soldier.

He did not want to treat him, but his medical profession required him to do so. As a doctor, it was his responsibility to save lives first, regardless of the person's identity. The general summoned Sadao and ordered him to murder the American soldier. It did not occur. Sadao assisted the soldier in fleeing in a boat. As a result, we can say that life is more important than faith in his country.

“What shall we do with this man?” Sadao muttered. But his trained hands seemed of their own will to be doing what they could to stanch the fearful bleeding. He packed the wound with the sea moss that strewed the beach. The man moaned with pain in his stupor but he did not awaken. “The best thing that we could do would be to put him back in the sea,” Sadao said, answering himself. Now that the bleeding was stopped for the moment he stood up and dusted the sand from his hands. “Yes, undoubtedly that would be best,” Hana said steadily. But she continued to stare down at the motionless man.

Long Answer Word Limit: 125-150

Q.

In "The Enemy," Pearl S. Buck, poses an open question: "What is a doctor's duty?" "What is the duty of a citizen in a time of war?" During a speech programme at your school's prayer, share your thoughts on the duty of a citizen during a time of war. You can start your speech with, "Dear friends, I have gotten permission to deliver a speech on "Duty of a Citizen during War Time." Make a connection between your speech and Dr. Sadao's actions in "The Enemy."

Introductory Paragraph of the Long Answer Question

"Hello, friends." I've been given the go-ahead to speak about the "Duty of a Citizen During War Time." The question is: Which comes first, humanity or duty? In our daily lives, there may be instances where we must do a task as part of our profession yet are prevented from doing so by another duty. These circumstances develop during wartime and among those who are fighting. In order to uphold his ethics toward his country, Dr. Sadao must decide whether to treat an American soldier as a patient or turn him over to the authorities.

Main Paragraph of the Long Answer Question

Sadao was a renowned surgeon who had taken an oath to save lives at any cost. They approached him and examined him. He was a wounded American soldier in the war. Dr. Sadao was in a pickle. Should he treat the injured American soldier or turn him over to the police? They would be arrested if they kept the man in their home. He would die if they left him there. They took him to their house after much deliberation. The servants were terrified when they saw the person and asked the doctor not to treat the war prisoner. They protested by leaving the house. This is how he was able to save his life as a doctor, but as a citizen, we might think that he didn't fulfill his duty. Dr.Sadao did his duty as a doctor and saved the life of a soldier by fleeing from his house. It was natural for a doctor who saved their life to kill the same person whose life he had saved.

Conclusion Paragraph of the Long Answer Question

I sincerely hope you make better decisions about your obligations during a time of conflict than Dr. Sadao did, who chose to save the enemy's life in order to fulfill his responsibility as a doctor.

Q.2. Dr. Sadao was compelled by his duty as a doctor to help the enemy soldier. What made Hana, his wife, sympathetic to him in the face of open defiance from the domestic staff? Did she help her husband save the life of an enemy? Suppose you were at the place of Hana; what would you do?

Sadao was a renowned surgeon who had taken an oath to save lives at any cost. They approached him and examined him. He was a war-wounded American soldier. Dr. Sadao was in a pickle. Should he treat the injured American soldier or turn him over to the police? Being a wife, it was Hana's duty to fulfill her husband's obligations.

Dr. Sadao also faces the dilemma of treating an American soldier as a doctor or handing over the soldier to the police to show his integrity towards his nation. Hana washed the white man's breasts and face with hot water as they began his treatment. It was her duty to help her husband, who is a doctor. Sadao carried out the surgery on the American soldier. He extracted his bullet from his body. He was still unconscious when he came to, and he was very weak. He was terrified by everything, and Hana reassured him that he would be fine soon. Thus, we can say that the life of the American soldier couldn't be saved without the help of Hana. So, she did her duty to help her husband.

I would have done the same to help my husband to save his patient's life and this shows the duty of a wife and her love for her husband.

Q.3. While hatred against a member of the enemy race is justifiable, especially during wartime, what makes a human being rise above narrow prejudices? Is it justified for Dr. Sadao to treat an enemy?

We may encounter situations in our lives where our profession requires us to do our duty but our duty to others prevents us from doing so. Such conditions arise at the time of war and with the people who are involved in the war. Dr. Sadao also faces the dilemma of treating an American soldier as a doctor or handing over the soldier to the police to show his integrity towards his nation.
